If you have your sights set on a college wrestling career, you should already be planning your road to that end. Of course, there are the high visibility accomplishments that would make someone an attractive recruit, such as winning one or more state championships, but there are other things that some college recruiters will consider when they are looking toward building the best college team possible. The more you understand what makes a good college recruit, the more likely you can become one and fulfill your dream.

Obviously, the first thing that will draw attention to you will be your successes on the mat. All coaches in every sport want the best athletes to compete for them.
